MACKEREL CATCH IS POOREST IN PAST FIVE YEARS

Receipts of fresh mackerel the past week have come largely from the shore traps, mostly from Provincetown. The seiners have landed some small catches, and some report that the fish have been down to the bottom, something they have been known to do in past years and remain for a period before they come to the surface. There is an absence of feed on the surface and some schools seen on the surface are very wild.

In the corresponding week last year the mackerel fleet landed 2,135,800 pounds of fresh mackerel which were caught in Cape Cod and Massachusetts bays and weighed from 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 pounds each.

The mackerel catch to date is the smallest in five years and is only a little over a third of what it was at this time last year. The total catch to date has only been 6,394,800 pounds as compared with 17,147,200 pounds in 1936; 16,184,900 pounds in 1935; 11,237,649 pounds in 1934; 11,443,165 pounds in 1933.
